Comparison of "The Prophetic Model of Interfaith Dialogue with Christians" and "Event of the Radically Revelation in the Theology of Walter Kasper"

Jen-Chien Lin¹

¹Phd Candidate, Graduate Institute of Religious Studies-NCCU

Abstract

Background - The religious dialogue between Islam and Christianity is a great mission that is working hard today. This kind of thinking will lead Muslims and Christians to experience God's will with virtuous hearts, in order to defuse the "religious rigidity" crisis. Because Islam and Christianity are both revealing monotheistic religions, they are very strictly exclusive, but they are also universal. The two religions' contradictory features cause tensions between them.

Purpose - The purpose of this study is to explore "The Promise of Muhammad to the Christians until the End of the World" from the "Prophetic Model of Interfaith Dialogue with Christians", and to make a comparison with the contemporary Roman Catholic Cardinal Walter Kasper's (1933 -) view that apocalyptic theology is an "Event of the Radically New". In particular, an in-depth exploration of the "Constitution of Medina" and the "People of the Book"(Ahl al-Kitāb) documents describes the pattern of dialogue between the prophets. The universal characteristics of Islam and Christianity are based on this dialogue.

Design/methodology/approach - This article will use the literature survey method to analyze the origin, content, and influence of the Promise of Muhammad within the "Prophetic Model of Interfaith Dialogue with Christians". The historical events that developed due to the Prophet Muhammad's revelations are the "Event of the Radically New". The description of Walter Caspar's apocalyptic theology is also the "Event of the Radically New", which leads to the possibility of dialogue and harmony between the two religions.

Findings - The key to problems discovered in the past is: How the various phenomena, interpretations, and positions in the revelations of the Muslim Prophet Muhammad and in the revelations of Christianity can gradually find common ground to solve their differences, which is very important for Islam and Christianity. In other words, the exclusivity and universality of monotheism are not an obstacle to dialogue; rather, they are two of its most basic constituents.

Research limitations - The study of dialogue is limited by differences between classical languages, cultures, and races.

Originality/value - The universal value of this dialogue should be made to conform to their monotheistic revelations, so that mutual tolerance, acceptance, and peace can be achieved
